We are coming up to an Easter and Bank Holiday Monday. Remembering the halcyon days when we were let out of our homes, you might like to see this picture from a 1931 Times issue of a Bank Holiday when folks were able to get on a bus from Clapham Common and go down to Box Hill for a new-fangled French invention called a picnic. The hotel is the Burford Bridge which last time I went by was still there. Happy days – but they will return – don't know where, don't know when, but – Vera Lynn will get us there! Not on those buses, motor bike and sidecars or even the de-luxe automobiles, I hope.

The World Turned Upside Down! A headline in Archaeology World March 15 announces that archaeologists have found a vast medieval palace buried under a prehistoric fortress at Old Sarum. Clever builders in those days and a good way to hide your wealth from HMRC, or they been invented then?

I do hope that you are all well. Let me know if there is something we can do or get organised for you.

Meanwhile, Lesley and I are hoping to have our picnic in the garden over the Bank Holiday. Maybe I will get the BBQ and the water feature out.
