At the top of our garden, which is on a steep slope, I have let the ground go to meadow. We are on chalk; the soil is poor so I mow/strim the grass twice a year. I pretend that I am being environmentally sensitive but, in reality it's too much hard work to do much else than let it lie fallow.

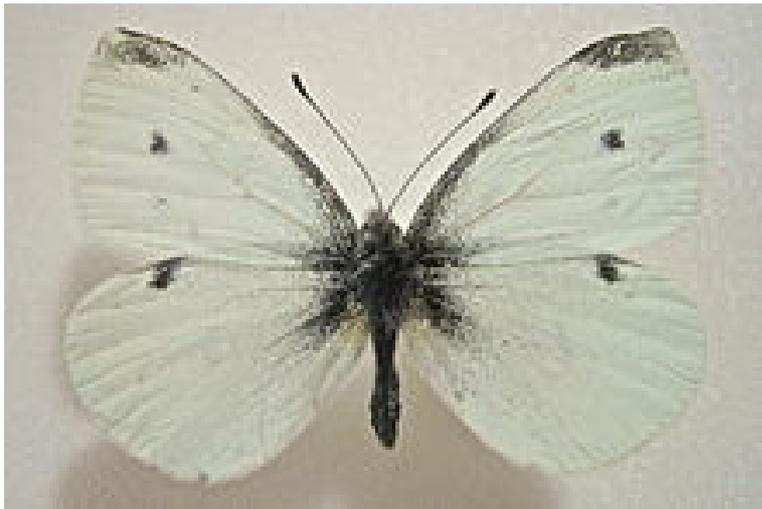

The benefit is that we get a lot of insects, meadow flowers for the pollinators, interesting wild flowers. This weekend my son went up to see the butterfly species present. Some butterfly fossils are dated to 56 million years ago. They use camouflage, mimicry and aposematism to evade their predators. Some species like the Monarch and the Painted Lady, migrate long distances.

On our meadow, Simon spotted the Meadow Brown

The Small White
